Not illustrated. 1892 Excerpt: . the application of a certain fertilizer, or combination of fertilizers, is tabulated below. The beets are valued in accordance with the factory prices paid in this state, the fertilizers according to thoir actual cost, and the lime residues from factory at the estimated cost of hauling five miles. The sugar manufacturers of this stale make no charge to their patrons for this material. The loss or gain on any subplat due to the use of any fertilizer is based upon the value of the beets raised upon the unfertilized subplat. It is interesting, in connection with this experiment, to note the variation in the chemical composition of the soils of some of these fertilized subplats, and compare these with that of an adjacent field which may be considered as representing the subplat not fertilized, as the character of the soil is the same. The following analyses were made by Mr. Elton Fnlmer. The samples were taken after the beet crops of 1891 had been removed that being the first year any fertilizers were applied. The application in each case was at the rate of 200 pounds to the acre, and this, judging from the results of the analysis, would seem to be considerably in excess of the demands of the crop: TRANSPLANTING. Plat I, comprising oue acre, was planted one-half with Desprez, and one-half with Klein Wanzlebener seed, at the rate of twenty pounds to the acre. After the beets had appeared above ground the...
