L i i o The Glow-worm. Lily and I often walk in the garden in the summer evenings; and, as it gets dusk, she is always delighted if we find a glow-worm, of which there are plenty about. Doesn t it twinkle, twinkle, like a little star, aunty dear? she says. A Gipsy Encampment. 111 How pleasant the evenings are in the hot summer weather! We used to drive out sometimes after dinner, and I remember one evening we had remained out rather late, till the moon had risen, when we came upon an encampment of gipsies by the road-side. They had a fire, where their supper was cooking, and the smoke was curling up among the trees. They were very merry, too, and seemed to be laughing at a story that one of them was telling; some ot the children belonging to them--little brown, half-naked creatures--came running after the carriage to beg. There are a good many tramps and gipsies about in the summer, but I often wonder where they all go during winter. 112 Reaping. Lily enjoys going into the fields when the corn is ripe, and the reaping has begun. She seems to delight in the earnestness and sober bustle of the wheat harvest as much as the fun, and freshness, and perfume of the haymaking....
